Mentoring In Health Professions Education

Evidence-Informed Strategies Across the Continuum

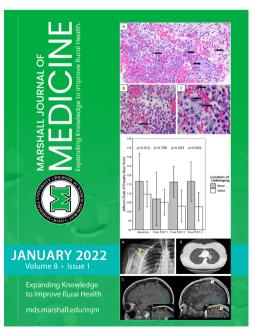

🖄 Springer

This book is the outcome of the co-editors (Alice Fornari and Darshana Shah) and all the solicited author expert's professional lifetime work focused on mentoring knowledge and skills. Academic medicine includes diverse health professionals and healthcare settings, and a successful career is highly dependent on finding and relating to mentors virtually at every career stage. The content describes mentor and mentee relationships from both perspectives, using a chapter format that imparts author knowledge and experiences. The breadth and depth of a mentormentee relationship is addressed beyond the traditional roles. All stages of practice, teaching and learning benefit from impactful mentoring relationships and we hope the content in this book adds a practical approach to the academic discipline of mentoring. You can purchase the book via Amazon or Springer and ask your library to consider E-Book access from Springer. Reviews are welcomed.
